

Photo courtesy of Lynn Betts, USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service.

A sediment basin is a man-made structure designed to hold stream water to allow sediment and pollutants time to settle. The water eventually flows out of the basin into downstream waterways.